Though this is the first publication of the kind the students of the school have ever undertaken, it is the equal of those produced by institutions where the issuance of an annual has been one of the regular occurrences of each school year. The book contains 114 pages, varied with illustrations and interesting matter. The photographs of the board of regents occupies the place of honor in the front of the book. Throughout the volume are photographs of the faculty members and all the various classes and associations. The editorial staff contributed a large number of excellent articles descriptive of the school year just closed. The book is bound in white, with the title printed in purple letters, forming a pretty combination of the Normal colors. The name, "El Crepusculo," means "The Dawn." It is peculiarly appropriate as the Normal university is upon the dawn of an era of increased usefulness and influence.

The typographical work was done in the Optic job room and is the most handsome piece of work this office has turned out in several months. The editorial staff of "El Crepusculo" is as follows: Justin Polk, editor-in-chief; Louis Lowry, business manager; Anna McMahon, Nellie Ell-
